THE RIGHT TO QUESTION

In front of a packed library of sixth form students, chaired by Elin Tomos and Beth Gaffey, a group of local politicians faced a host of questions on a variety of pertinent themes.

Aled Roberts, Alun Ffred Jones, Guto Bebb and Sion Wyn Jones were praised by the student body, not only for the economy and humour of their answers but also their ability to quickly draft answers to previously unseen questions.

From their individual reasons for entering politics to their collective agreement of the difference politics can make in people's lives, including the times when they feverously disagreed with one another, the contributions of the politician's was widely appreciated.

At the end of the session the politicians retreated unscathed having left the students a challenge - 'What difference, whether within politics or not, can you make to peoples lives?'
